

Extrait du Rhuthmos

<http://www.rhuthmos.eu/spip.php?article2460>

Towards a rhythmanalysis of debt dressage : Education as rhythmic resistance in everyday indebted life

Rhuthmos

This paper has already been published in Policy Futures in Education, 0(0) 1-14, 2017. It is freely available on Academia. We thank Jason Thomas Wozniak for the permission to republish it here.

<dl class='spip_document_4515 spip_documents spip_documents_left' style='float:left;'>

Abstract : Debt shapes subjectivity by rhythmically training indebted subjects. Stated slightly differently, there exists a debt dressage that produces indebted subjectivity. One of the principle aims of this article is to introduce rhythm into the debt analysis debates. Building on Henri Lefebvre's book Rhythmanalysis : Space, Time and Everyday Life, this article attempts to theoretically justify, as well as engage in, a rhythmanalysis of indebted life. The article concludes with the claim that education experience can be made up of, and produce, rhythms that disrupt the production of indebted subjectivity.

Keywords : Debt, indebted life, rhythm, rhythmanalysis, education